The kingdom of Ahmadnagar was an important polity in the sixteenth-century Deccan. Their patronage of architecture and patterns of planning reflect their aspirational connections with the Timurids and diplomatic connections with the Safavids. Their architectural legacy continued as the early Maratha state emerged from their erstwhile domains. In this lecture, we will see how architectural evidence can be used to recover and narrate these connections and cultural continuities.

Pushkar Sohoni
Assistant Professor, Humanities and Social Sciences, IISER Pune

Pushkar Sohoni is a historian, originally trained as an architect. He received his graduate degrees in Historic Preservation (MS 2002) and the History of Art (PhD 2010) from the University of Pennsylvania, after which he was a post-doctoral fellow at the University of British Columbia. His research has mostly been on the cultural history of the medieval Deccan, and he has published on architecture, numismatics, and socio-linguistics. His latest book is Architecture as Evidence of Cultural Continuities: The Sultanate of Ahmadnagar.